Young Researcher Track Call

From AIED 1999 in Le Mans we established a tradition of running a Young Researcher Track (YRT) during our conferences. Usually, PhD students cannot write and submit a paper at the early stage of their research; however, they can present the main ideas they are currently developing and implementing and they can benefit from advice and exchanges from senior researchers from outside their lab.

The submitted papers are reviewed by senior researchers. The accepted papers are presented during sessions that are scheduled during the main conference, and feedback will be provided during these presentations. The accepted papers will be edited in a special volume and a two page summary will be included in the proceedings of the main conference.

Students can also benefit from participating in the AIED conference, which is a major event for the research community, they can establish links at the international level with other students working in the same area and they can prepare themselves to become the AIED researchers of tomorrow. Several authors selected for previous YRT sessions wrote that they would never have attended the conference without being accepted for this category of presentation and they would really have missed something important for them.

Finally, there will be a prize for the best YRT paper that will help to cover travel expenses for an outstanding young researcher.

We invite all young researchers to submit a paper to the AIED 2005 YRT, and we invite our colleagues acting as PhD supervisors to encourage their students to write down their ideas and submit a paper.

Eligibility for the YRT

Any young researcher who has not been awarded his PhD by January 1st 2005 and who wrote the paper alone (or is the first author).

Format and submission requirements

Submissions must be submitted electronically via the AIED2005 paper submission system (<http://hcs.science.uva.nl/AIED2005/submission.html>). Submissions must be formatted as for the main conference papers. YRT papers should not exceed 6 pages.

Important dates

- Submission deadline: March 1st, 2005

- Acceptance notification: March 31st, 2005
- 2 pages summary for the main conference proceedings: April 29th, 2005
- 6 pages final version for the YRT proceedings: May 20th, 2005
